861 receive any advice from him. The Mossi, fathers and mothers alike, do not know how to train their children. Under the pretext that a small child does not know what he is doing, the parents allow him to do as he pleases and to carry out his every whim without punishment. Tots who can barely articulate two words utter the coarsest insults to their mother and beat her with their small fists without being punished. The onlookers merely remark that some day he will be a fighter. To chastise him would be to make him cry, and a child's tears are always an embarrassment to be avoided as much as possible. When a child behaves badly, when he fights, steals, seeks out the company of professional thieves or young scamps, when he tells everybody what he has seen and heard and cannot keep a secret, when complaints are made against him, then his father and mother punish him and warn him not to do it again; but they do not prevent wrong doing, and [672] if necessary they will pay his debts, because all members of the family, especially the father, are held liable. The father does not teach his son the cult and the sacrifices, but he does request the boy's help. The child watches his father, and when he grows up, he does as his father did.

857 Boys of twelve or fifteen may fail to return home in the evening for any reason whatever, without warning, and no one worries about it: "He will come soon enough." The young man of twenty builds ● 884 himself a hut apart from his father's house, in order to have greater 593 freedom and to receive any visitors he may want. Besides his father's field, he cultivates his own piece of land and sells the produce /36/ himself in order to buy clothes. His father feeds him but rarely presents him with gifts of clothing when he is old enough to work for himself. If he weaves cloth during the dry season, he may do with it as he pleases, sell it or make clothing. His father has no say in the matter. It is the father, however, who teaches his sons how to 868 593 cultivate the soil, how to plait mats, and sometimes how to weave. If the father works at a trade, he teaches it to his sons: the drummers teach their children to beat the drum and to sing the chief's praises; the jewellers and smiths teach their sons their respective professions.

593 The father usually is fond of his children and likes to play with them when they are small. He watches over them while the mother does her household tasks. Parents sincerely lament their children's death, and children that of their siblings. Undoubtedly there are parents with the greatest indifference toward their offspring, but such

881 adorned, they go in a group to greet the mother of each one in turn,
304 but they do not go out into the village like the boys.

In short, among the Mossi and Foulsé of Yatenga, circumcision and excision are not characterized by the intervention of any powerful religious society like the komo among the Bambara and among the Mandé in general. Nor do we find here those picturesque details which are so strikingly present among the Malinké of Upper Guinea and even more so among the tribes of Lower Guinea (Soussou /Susu/, Landouman /Landuma/, etc.) (3). Nevertheless, circumcision is important in the lives of the Mossi and Foulsé of Yatenga, because it transforms the child into a young man.

3. On this topic, see André Arcin, La Guinée française /French Guinea/, pp. 438-446, and Noirot, A travers le Foutah-Djallon et le Bambouk /Across the Fouta Djallon and Bambouk/, concerning the Landouman.

591 After circumcision. —Following circumcision or excision, only marriage remains. When a girl married, as we have seen above, she leaves her compound and goes to her husband's residence. The young man, however, remains in his own compound. He is given a cabin, a hut, for himself and his bride if there is one available and empty, or a new one is built for him. When he has a child, he builds a hut near his own for the young mother and son, unless he is given another one which is available.

●884 Emancipation and coming of age. —One can scarcely speak of emancipation and coming of age among the Mossi. A man comes of age when he marries, but he always remains a minor to some extent vis-à-vis his work group, his compound, and his family. Emancipation /262/ and coming of age are French concepts which have no equivalent among the Mossi in particular and the Sudanese in general. One might acknowledge, however, as does Vadier in his monograph on Yatenga, a sort of coming of age around the age of 17 or 18 for purposes of buying and selling.

429 Guardianship. —When a Mossi dies, his wives and children revert to his oldest brother. If there are many wives and children, they are apportioned among the brothers of the deceased. The head of the family presides over the distribution.